Thomas Ahern Named in Ireland Squad for Autumn Internationals

Waterford’s Thomas Ahern has been chosen in Andy Farrell’s roster for Ireland’s upcoming Autumn Internationals, capping off a transformative season for the Munster lock. Ahern secured his senior international inaugural in August against Georgia, then added a second cap versus Portugal, shining with his agility, lineout expertise, and vigor across the pitch.

His selection signifies another critical milestone in a campaign that has seen him develop into one of Ireland’s most thrilling forwards. Head Coach Andy Farrell has revealed a 34-man lineup for the Gallagher Cup encounter versus New Zealand in Chicago, and for the Quilter Nations tournament at the Aviva Arena.

Caelan Doris will captain the team, while Leinster prop Paddy McCarthy is the only inexperienced player in the primary group. Connacht winger Shayne Bolton, who debuted on the summer tour, and untried Munster duo Edwin Edogbo and Brian Gleeson will journey to Chicago as replacements.

Farrell’s pick merges experienced members with emerging prospects as Ireland prepares for a rigorous November run. Several prominent names, Hugo Keenan, Joe McCarthy, Calvin Nash, and Cormac Izuchukwu, miss out through injury, but the head coach has decided to reward form and flexibility in his selections.

Autumn Internationals 2025: Farrell Confirms Ireland Squad for Autumn Tests

I’m delighted to announce the squad for the four November fixtures, Farrell said. There’s an electrifying mixture to the alignment, and there’s a possibility for the more senior players and for those who emerged on the Summer Tour to Georgia and Portugal. The coaching team is enthusiastic to see each player grasp their opportunity over the coming weeks.

This November’s Autumn Internationals 2025 tournament will be a formidable test. We face four top southern hemisphere sides, which are themselves coming from arduous schedules and eager to end the year resolutely. First up is New Zealand, and we’re eager to return to Chicago for the Gallagher Cup.

I’m convinced Irish fans will again turn out in strength to support the team in a splendid city and at a world-class venue. For Ahern, the summons is affirmation for unbroken performance and rising maturity in the Munster second row. The ex-Waterpark RFC and Shannon graduate has long been regarded as one of Irish rugby’s most hopeful talents, and his ongoing presence at Test level accentuates his ascending role in Farrell’s plans progressing into the next World Cup cycle.

Ireland will convene at the IRFU High Performance Centre on October 20 before departing for Chicago the subsequent day. They commence their Autumn

Internationals campaign against New Zealand at Soldier Field on November 1, then return home to host Japan, Australia, and South Africa in three consecutive weekends at the Aviva Stadium.

Ireland Vs New Zealand: Ahern Impresses as Ireland Finalizes Autumn Preparations

The Australia and South Africa matchups are already sold out, with only scarce seats remaining for the opening against Japan. As Ireland gears up for a challenging series, Farrell’s squad has been participating in an intensive training block emphasizing conditioning, defensive synchronization, and set-piece precision.

The trainers have underlined composure under stress, ensuring that Ireland’s forwards remain vigilant in collision areas while the backs refine their attacking patterns ahead of the Ireland Vs New Zealand clash. The inclusion of several developing players emphasizes Farrell’s broader vision to revitalize Ireland’s depth in preparation for the 2027 Rugby World Cup campaign.

Thomas Ahern’s ascent to international prominence has been defined by determination and steady progress. Measuring six-foot-nine, the towering lock has continuously impressed through his mobility and leadership presence, frequently dictating tempo within Munster’s forward pack. Supporters and analysts are particularly eager to see how Ahern adapts to the pace and physical intensity of elite-tier international rugby.

His performances in the United Rugby Championship have garnered widespread acclaim from both teammates and pundits, reinforcing his case for national selection. Those who know the Waterford-born forward portray him as humble, focused, and highly competitive, traits that align seamlessly within Farrell’s philosophy of continuous improvement.
